More particularly, the present invention relates to high dielectric constant (High-k) gate dielectric stacks and methods for manufacturing them. Conventional non-volatile memory (NVM) structures of the prior art (e.g., NVM cells, NVM transistor) use a gate dielectric stack of silicon dioxide or silicon nitride. While these gate dielectric materials provide an excellent interface between the gate electrode and the cell channel, they exhibit a relatively low dielectric constant (k) of about 3.9-4.2. Efforts have been made to reduce the equivalent oxide thickness (EOT) and increase the thickness of the dielectric to enhance the charge retention capabilities of a memory cell. For instance, EPO applications EP-A-1 022 793 and EP-A-1 022 792 disclose High-k gate dielectric stacks. Furthermore, U.S. Pat. No. 6,420,496 and U.S. Pat. No. 6,420,496 disclose high dielectric materials. However, the related art still suffers from a number of disadvantages. For example, as the EOT is decreased, electron tunneling can create a severe reliability issue. This electron tunneling can be induced by several factors including Fowler-Nordheim tunneling, direct tunneling, and hot carrier injection. The above problems are discussed more thoroughly below in conjunction with FIGS. 1-4. FIG. 1 illustrates a fragmentary cross sectional elevation view of a semiconductor device 10 that can be formed utilizing conventional technology. Die 10

Waves J37 Tape AUHOMC Blog The average age of a parent in California is nearing 50 - and for good reason: Of those children born in California in 2007, one in three has a parent between the ages of 45-65. By the time they are 4 years old, 41 percent of California children have two or more grandparents living in the household. Around 20 percent of those grandparents live together and 18 percent live apart from one another. So what does this all mean for families? It's a shift in the structure of family life. With more grandparents sharing households than parents, a new dimension to the traditional family is being exposed: The grandparents, or "grandma and grandpa" as they're called by many young children, are likely to play a more central role in the family. Whether it's in the form of play or caretaking, grandparents are more likely to be involved than their parents. In fact, nearly three-quarters (73 percent) of young children with at least one grandparent in the home as compared with 22 percent of young children with only one parent. And as the grandparents become more involved, that can have a positive impact on children and families. Children with more grandparents are more likely to grow up in a healthy environment, because children with more relatives show a greater interest in looking after themselves. Children with more grandparents have stronger family bonds, and are more likely to talk about their family and childhood with them

His latest comments on the world of football came after speculation that the Red Devils boss Louis van Gaal is preparing to bring in an attacking midfielder when he takes over at Old Trafford from David Moyes at the end of the season. And the Manchester-born star thinks the former United defender, who he recently admitted would be a great addition to the Blues team, could go on to achieve similar things to what he has already done with the Red Devils.
