Q: Unsupported compression algorithm I'm using the curl -XPOST command to upload files to a website, but it doesn't work. I get this message: Unsupported compression algorithm (16) The website doesn't support zip files. The code that I use is: curl -XPOST -v -u USERNAME:PASSWORD -H "Content-Type: multipart/form-data" -H "Accept: application/json" -F "name=entry.zip" -F "description=Zip file" -F "mimeType=application/zip" -F "compression=ascii" -F "file=@entry.zip" Anyone knows how to upload files? A: The message does not say the website is not supporting the given algorithm or the command is wrong, but that it cannot determine the algorithm used to compress the input. The difference is in the returned error code. The input to the webserver is compressed using an algorithm that has been chosen by the server. The server has to decide which algorithm to use based on the input provided by the client. Your input is a zip file, which is compressed using the zip algorithm - which is supported by curl. Your input is 'application/zip'. The website does not support this. Your input is an empty file. The website has not provided the name/mime of the file, so can't determine the format. It is possible to use another method to determine the algorithm. The PHP extension called fileinfo will do just that: $fileinfo = new finfo(FILEINFO_MIME); $mime = $fileinfo->file(path_to_file); The documentation says: Whether this function checks the file's mime type. So in this case it is safe to assume that the file is not compressed, and hence is just an empty file. It is not possible to determine the algorithm from the output of curl, because curl will tell you only that it cannot determine the algorithm used for the input. The site has to determine the algorithm used, and this is done by examining
